I agree with Charles Dickens. I understand his statement like a time-wasting. I can express my personal opinion giving 2 reasons and examples.

The first reason is humans' boring when he or she doesn't do something. ^{any} Second reason is that what time is away and we cannot bring it back. And I'll give examples to illustrate my reasons.

For instance, my cousin always wastes his time for meaningless things instead his homework, which he postpones every day. This example illustrates the first reason.

My pen-friend Amanda loves to sing. But, despite it, she's keen on literature. Amanda could go to the forum however she hesitated. And then it was too late. Now she's a well-known singer but sometimes regrets about her unfulfilled dream.

Examples can be given from different stories and books. There is such concept as side life. Pekka Rollins, who is character

The novel is "Six of crows" by ^{the} writer Leigh Bardugo. It led to "idle life" and that's not finished well. I can give a lot of examples, which can confirm my thoughts and the statement written by Charles Dickens.

In conclusion, I wanna say we need to spend our time with benefit. In avoidance ^{of} needless activities can give us more time.
